President Mark Schlissel
Office of the President
503 Thompson Street
Ann Arbor, MI 48104

President Schlissel,

We are the members of the executive committee for MC²: Michigan and the Climate Crisis, alongside Climate Blue and University of Michigan student delegates to the United Nations’ 2017 Conference of Parties. MC² is a Michigan Bicentennial event that explores the University’s relationship to climate change through its past and how it reckons with the climate crisis in its present. We also turn our eyes to possible futures, where we might rise to meet the climate challenge. We ask you to rise to the climate challenge by committing the University of Michigan to supporting the landmark 2015 Paris agreement through the We Are Still In pledge.

The University of Michigan’s Bicentennial asks us to “look forward and help launch our third century.” Climate change will define that century. Global temperatures will rise. Island nations will face inundation. The world’s food balance will shift fundamentally. Our beloved Michigan ecosystems will change. Many of the challenges that tomorrow’s U-M leaders will face will be caused by climate change, and the worst effects will be borne on the world’s least capable of responding to them. We’re at a critical point for not only Michigan, but the world: The shift to a climate-resilient future can and must start today.

Michigan has in many ways proven itself as one of the “Leaders and Best” on climate change. Centers like the Graham Sustainability Institute, International Forestry Resources and Institutions, and the Energy Institute are at the cutting edge of climate research. Michigan’s ambitious target to reduce emissions by 25% by 2025 put it in step with the United States’ goals submitted in their first National Determined Contribution to the Paris Agreement.

But individual actions, however exemplary, aren’t enough. The ubiquity of fossil fuels and the global externalities of the greenhouse effect lead experts to define climate change as a moral problem, rather than a technical one. Reducing our emissions and conducting research demonstrate our leadership, but the climate crisis demands that we commit as an institution. Mitigating the worst effects of climate change means collaboration on a global scale—a lofty goal that was achieved through the landmark 2015 Paris Agreement.
Without climate action at a federal level, Michigan should do what it does best—find new solutions to the world’s most pressing problems. By signing on to the We Are Still In pledge, the university commits to “support climate action to meet the Paris Agreement,” joining over a thousand US leaders and the world on climate action. Because of Michigan’s already-ambitious emissions goals, it will not cost the University a penny—but it will send a signal to the world and strengthen the global climate compact. And as climate action unfolds in the future, Michigan will have a seat at the table.

We hope you were able to attend our events this week. You would have seen the passion of our students and faculty, and heard from global leaders on what it will take for us to beat climate change. From the teach-in to racial justice to Earth Day, Michigan has always challenged the present and enriched the future through tough questions and bold actions. In 2015, you said that you supported “an enduring framework for human progress” on climate change. At the beginning of its third century, Michigan is poised again to act boldly. Let’s tell the world that Michigan is Still In.

In signing this letter, we are joined by individuals and groups across the University of Michigan and Ann Arbor community who are committed to acting on climate change and avoiding the worst impacts of a warming world. The wide coalition of actors signing this letter, including hundreds of Michigan students, show the urgency of the climate crisis, and the moral responsibility that University of Michigan addresses through committing to the Paris Agreement.

Best,

Michigan and the Climate Crisis Executive Committee
